7.1.2 Waste Management Facility

Vermi-compost Fertilizer Unit Report

The college has a Vermi-compost Fertilizer Unit of 2 beds. The unit was established in 2018. The project bead by college fund. The unit comprises total 02 beds. They are constructed with compost politheen bag depth of 2.5 feet and the width of 2.00 feet. They are covered with a tin roof. For the continuous moisture, a water supply is provided with a PVC pipeline.

There are three layers in a bed. The first layer is made up of the coarse sand. The layer of the coarse sand is covered with the clay. The third layer is made up of the fine sand which covers the soil layer. The organic material is filled on as base of the sand and clay layer in the unit beds. The slurry of dung is spread on the upper surface of the organic waste material. The leaves, fruits and grass are collected from the entire campus. The organic waste material and cow dung are used as food material for the worms.

The earthworms (Eisnia Foetida) are introduced into the beds for the further process of decomposition and formation of vermi-compost from the manure. The worms inhabit in the beds and continuously feed on the organic matter and produce excreta which is used a rich compost fertilizer. Simultaneously, the worms also excrete liquid waste known as vermiwash which is useful for the agricultural purpose as a pesticide.

After every two months, we collect the vermicompost manure from the beds with the careful handling of the worms. The collected fertilizer is packed in the degradable bags and distributed in campus as per the requirement of the departments. It is used for the college gardens such as Rashi, Nakshatra, Vrundavana, Mango Garden and the Botanical Garden.

Department of Geography takes care of the unit and maintains the record of the distribution of the fertilizer.

The benefits and the significance of the activity are as follows:

- Reduces waste and produces rich bio fertilizer and creates balance in the ecology
- Increases crop yield and declines the dependence of the chemical fertilizers
- Soil structures affected by principally through the formation of burrows which produces porous nature of soil
- Increases water infiltration and water holding capacity of soil and the aeration of soil
- Earthworm castes are enriched with the essential plant nutrients and enhances soil fertility.

3. Water Conservation

Rain Water Harvesting System

Waste water Management

Water usage can be described as the amount of water consumed on campus for all activities from various water sources. This applies to all residences, academic buildings, on-campus, and on-grounds usage. Water that is moved off campus is referred to as wastewater. Based on data on water usage and the fact that around 80% of the water supplied is converted to waste water via washrooms, chemical laboratories, and other means, the campus created approximately 6,000 liters of waste water every day.

There is a combined drainage system in place that carries all liquid effluent to a sewage system. It is necessary to collect grey and black water. After minimal treatment, grey water is used for plant irrigation, and black water is effectively treated with a simple septic system and soak pits.

Rain Water Harvesting Potential

There are four adjacent buildings that possess large terrace areas and paved surface. All of the buildings had Rain Water Harvesting (RWH) System implementation. But as construction is in progress, RWH are not in working. But, after completion of construction work RWH will be reinstalled. The harvested water is released in the pond available in the college campus. The water harvested in the pond is utilized for the purpose of gardening in the college campus.
